

Don Rupp

Since childhood, Don Rupp's goal was always to teach music to young people. He went to UCLA and graduated with a degree in music education to realize that dream. However, the limited pay and long hours associated with teaching forced him into the business world instead.

After 20 years of success in business, Don had risen to the position of Vice President of a national medical software company. What came along with that was high pay, but long hours which no time left to spend with his young son Alex. Don also felt a sense of loss, as after 20 years he was not pursuing his dream of teaching music.

Wanting a way out of the rat race, Don looked at ACN and knew he'd found something special. Don attributes his being coachable and following the system, as keys to his success. Don is now a top 10 Team Coordinator with The Company, growing his business both in the U.S.A. and Australia. More important, because of ACN, Don now has the time freedom to invest in his son's life, coaching Alex both academically and in after-school sports. Best of all, when the school district cut the music program at his son's elementary school, Don was able to step up, realize his own dream, and teach music to the kids at the school... for free.

"In over 20 years of business, I've never met a person who was content with their position in life. If you're like me, and have found yourself off track, then ACN is the way to get your priorities straight."

Don now enjoys a prosperous ACN business, helping others enjoy a brighter future.
